

The reasons for having created rules regarding ownership are still with us -- perhaps now more than ever. I heartily disagree with any further easing of such restrictions. Corporations always lobby to protect themselves; but today's small businesses are tomorrow's corporations -- and corporations know that. Allowing them to greedily swallow whole markets while they do have funds and influence essentially kills the free market of tomorrow -- leading to stagnation, as the same handful of companies strangle the new competition of the future. Allowing this /appears/ to be free-market, but it is actually protectionist. Please don't allow it.
